Bio Summary

Return to Index

Laura is a researcher, evaluator, and educator with international experience communicating program, policy, and research impacts for global audiences. Her areas of expertise include qualitative, narrative, and visual research methods, community-based participatory research, lived experience with chronic conditions, disability policy, and translation of research findings to programming interventions and continuing education for healthcare professionals. Recent studies include a) innovative interventions to improve relational care for people with chronic brain injury, b) cost-effectiveness of residential services and supports for people with chronic brain injury, c) community integration of older adults with chronic brain injury, d) health and functional impacts of exercise for adults with chronic brain injury, e) evaluation of a continuing clinical education program for HIV/AIDS care, and f) lived experience with transitions to community living for adults with chronic brain injury.

Since 2004, Laura has been using innovative visual and narrative methods to include patient perspectives with health and healthcare in public policy-making. She is visiting scholar at the Schneider Institutes for Health Policy, Heller School for Social Policy and Management, Brandeis University and director of research and education for the non-profit organization Supportive Living Inc. With Supportive Living Laura works with 14 interdisciplinary colleagues to plan and implement research on physical, cognitive, and social fitness of people with chronic brain injury residing in group homes in the community. Supportive Living hosts over 30 student interns each year to support health and wellness programming and research.

Prior to her graduate studies, Laura worked over 20 years in international development as a photo-journalist, writer, and editor for UNICEF, World Food Programme, CARE, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), and Management Sciences for Health among others. Her assignments often involved encouraging community partnerships, project replication, and behavior change—for example, to improve girls' access to education. For six years she was an editor of The Manager, a quarterly continuing education publication for health program managers in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Since 2001 she has used photovoice (a participatory visual method of research) to engage youth, patients, and communities in the U.S. and South Africa in picturing local problems and strengths and motivating action for change.

Laura has developed and taught graduate and undergraduate courses (Qualitative Research Methods and Introduction to Social Policy). She mentors students, serves as faculty for independent studies, serves on dissertation committees, and facilitates training workshops.

Laura has published in peer review journals in health, sociology, brain injury, managed care, disability, and visual studies. She has published two books: Brain Injury Survivors: Narratives of Rehabilitation and Healing (Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2010) under their series Disability in Society and, as co-editor with Ron Berger, Disability and Qualitative Inquiry: Methods for Rethinking an Ableist World (Ashgate, 2015). Laura has also co-authored a policy issue brief on the continuum of care for chronic brain injury in Massachusetts through the Massachusetts Health Policy Forum, and a white paper on harm reduction for out-of-treatment individuals with a grant from the Campaign for a New Drug Policy, Open Society Foundations.

Laura received her PhD in social policy (health policy/health services research) from Brandeis University (2008) and a Master of Education (instructional design/adult education) from the University of Massachusetts Boston (2001). She holds a BA in English Literature from Bowdoin College.
